

STUDY USA - Ambassadorial Role - Deliver 5 presentations to promote Northern Ireland

From its inception, the program has assumed that students will enhance their careers if they can speak well in public. STUDY USA students are expected to seek opportunities to speak in public while they are in the United States and around the world. Public speaking also gives students the opportunity to tell Americans something of life in Northern Ireland, life that is often misunderstood in the United States. The presentations are a requirement of the programme funders at DEL, they like to know that our students are performing an Ambassadorial role and informing others about NI, which will hopefully encourage our US friends to come visit and help our economy.

Students have been provided with a selection of background information on Northern Ireland at the Pre-Departure meeting in Belfast. The hope is that they will have opportunities to speak to classes or other student groups on and off campus, in the International club, St. Patrick events, at local public schools, and to church and civic groups.

The US host college contact person or the student advisor can assist by placing the student in contact with church, voluntary and civic groups. These students can make excellent Wednesday night programs at a local church or luncheon speakers for the community's civic organizations.
